

Lehman Calls Plans To Widen U. S. House Powers Over Entry, Travel An Affront

Former U.S. Senator Herbert H. Lehman attacked a proposal that would transfer jurisdiction over immigration and passport legislation in the House of Representatives to the Committee on Un-American Activities.

The chairman of the committee, Representative Francis E. Walter, Democrat of Pennsylvania, has proposed that the panel be dissolved and recreated as a Committee on Internal Security, says the New York Times. In its new form the Committee would take over immigration matters from the Judiciary Committee, and passport legislation, now handled partly by the Judiciary and partly by the Foreign Affairs Committee.

"The proposal would label every alien a suspect and a possible subversive," Mr. Lehman said. "It would be an unbearable affront to millions of Americans of foreign birth and descent. Its effect would be to give our enemies abroad a new propaganda whip with which to beat us." Mr. Lehman spoke at a press conference at the Overseas Press Club, 85 East Thirty-ninth Street, in New York.

In another development, the National Lawyers Guild made public the text of a letter it has sent to every member of the House. The letter urges support of a resolution to abolish the Committee on Un-American Activities. The Justice Department recently abandoned a five-year effort to put the Guild on the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations.

The name of the Committee itself, the Guild said, "as the Supreme Court indicated, condemns it. In the words of the court, 'Who can define the meaning of un-American?'"

"The most stunning aspect of this proposal is the reported likelihood that it will have the support of the House leadership on both sides of the political aisle," Mr. Lehman said. "It is obvious that this proposal is designed to serve only two purposes: to enlarge the authority of Mr. Walter, and to breathe permanent life into the moribund Un-American Activities Committee."

The former Senator said that "this preposterous move may be made without any public discussion or debate or consideration, before the regular legislative business of the new session even begins. I have told members of my own party, the Democratic party — although this is not a partisan matter — that if this proposal is approved, the party will hear a major share of the blame that will be assessed for this shocking project."

Rabbi's World Tour To Herald N. Y. Airport Synagogue

The Rev. Dr. Israel Goldstein is on a world trip by air to herald the International Synagogue that will be built at New York International Airport, Idlewild, Queens. Dr. Goldstein, senior rabbi of Congregation Bnai Jehshurun, 287 West Eighty-eighth Street, in New York, is honorary president of the new synagogue.

He will act as emissary for the synagogue and the New York Board of Rabbis first in the Far East, then the Middle East, including Israel, and in Australia, South Africa and Europe. He will tell Jewish communities about this house of worship to link adherents of Judaism over the world, says the New York Times.

Ground-breaking for the Synagogue, on land rented from the Port of New York Authority, will take place in the spring, according to Isaac Charash, president of the congregation.

At a departure ceremony at Idlewild, he and the Rev. Dr. A. Alan Steinbach, president of the Board of Rabbis, gave Dr. Goldstein five scrolls to leave with Jewish communities on the four continents and in Israel. On a scroll it is written: "The International Synagogue and Center will symbolize the invincible spirit of Judaism in the free world and will strengthen the ties that bind us together in an indissoluble

U. N. Chief Would Mark Israeli-Syrian Border

Dag Hammarskjöld's talks with Premier David Ben-Gurion ended with a technical discussion of ways to prevent further incidents along the Israeli-Syrian border. An Israeli official who was present during the talks said the "over-all impact" of the visit by the United Nations Secretary General "might well have an influence" on the area.

In recent weeks there have been a number of serious clashes between the Israelis and Syrian units of the United Arab Republic, says the New York Times. Last month Israel complained to the United Nations Security Council about them. Mr. Hammarskjöld was asked by the Council to take up the matter with the two sides during his current Middle Eastern tour.

In discussing the Syrian border problem, Mr. Hammarskjöld suggested the possibility of marking the international boundary. For the last ten years this line has never been drawn out on the ground, and there have been numerous instances where civilians and troops have wandered over it, Israel agreed in principle to this suggestion, an official said.

The Secretary General met with Mr. Ben-Gurion and other Israeli officials in Jerusalem and continued his talks at Sda Boker, a settlement in the Negev. He spent several hours alone with Mr. Ben-Gurion discussing the general situation in the Middle East. They were joined by aides for more detailed talks on the immediate problem of the Syrian border and on Israel's demand for the implementation of Article 8 of the Israel-Jordan armistice agreement.

This article would give Israel access to Jewish holy places within the Old City of Jerusalem, now part of Jordan. It would also provide for access to the Israeli enclave on Mount Scopus, which is also within the Jordanian sector of Jerusalem.

Since the signing of the armistice in 1949 the article has been largely ignored by the Jordanians, says the New York Times. Mr. Hammarskjöld promised, as he has several times in the past, to again raise the question of the agreement with the Jordanians. But there was no indication that a new approach would be found or that any substantial progress could be made.

After the talks, an Israeli spokesman said Mr. Hammarskjöld

Cites Need For Jewish Religious Leaders In America

Warning that "a real return to world religion is imperative if the real is to avoid 'total disaster,'" Dr. Louis Finkelstein, chancellor of The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York, extolled his fellow theologian, Dr. Israel Goldstein, as being exemplary of the dedicated leadership that is necessary to accelerate spiritual recovery. "In a world whose continued existence depends upon our ability to progress in the humanities, in philosophy, and in the techniques of ethical decision-making to an extent which will be commensurate with our rapid strides in technology and the sciences," Dr. Finkelstein said, "we are sorely in need of leaders who draw upon the tradition for inspiration, and who understand its application to the perplexing problems of modern civilization."

Addressing more than 500 guests at the Hotel Plaza, in New York, where homage was paid to Dr. Goldstein on the occasion of his fortieth anniversary as a rabbi and leader of 134-year-old Congregation Bnai Jehshurun, Dr. Finkelstein declared that there are only two sources for such leadership. "One is men like Rabbi Goldstein, whose lives and careers give evidence of their personal dedication to these goals, and who are young enough so that we may look to them for many years of continued leadership. The other source is our youth, as yet untutored in organizational skills but who give evidence of the religious devotion in which such talents are best grounded. The education of these young people, so that they may fulfill their promise, is perhaps the greatest immediate challenge facing us."

Dr. Finkelstein, chairman of the board of trustees of Congregation Bnai Jehshurun and toastmaster for the dinner, had announced earlier that members of the congregation and other friends of Dr. Goldstein were establishing a chair in practical theology in his name at the Seminary, and in referring to this, Dr. Finkelstein said: "We are fortunate in being met at the precise point where the two roads of recognized leadership and the promise of youth cross. As we dedicate the Israel Goldstein Chair in Practical Theology at the Seminary, we stand at the crossroads of these paths. In the future, side by side with Dr. Goldstein, will march the young men who have been inspired by his example, and whose education will be in part enriched and assured by virtue of the professorship which will bear his name."

Dr. Finkelstein, on behalf of the faculties and officers of the Seminary presented to Dr. Goldstein a scroll which stated that the chair in practical theology that will bear his name: "will perpetuate his achievement as a vibrant inspiration for untold future generations." Among others who lauded Dr. Goldstein were former Senator Herbert H. Lehman, former Gov. Averell Harriman, of New York, and Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization. Senator Lehman said that establishment of the new chair is "a singularly fitting tribute to Dr. Goldstein's significant contribution to the betterment of our community and our nation."

Dr. Goldmann declared that Dr. Goldstein "combines the hard-head-

Urges Jews, Arabs To Cooperate For Peace, Greatness, Glory In Mideast

The head of the Zionist Organization of America issued a strong appeal to the Arab peoples and their leaders to cooperate with Israel "toward a common good." Such "fruitful and constructive cooperation," Dr. Emanuel Neumann, the president, declared, "would bring to the Middle East, which is the cradle and common homeland of both Jews and Arabs, not only peace and prosperity but a return to greatness and renewal of their former glory."

Speaking at the recent convention of the Zionist Organization of America, at Miami Beach, Florida, says the New York Times, Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization, outlined what he termed the three major problems for Israel in the next ten years:

1. The normalization of its relations with the Arab world for which "there is a serious hope that this may be achieved in the second decade."
2. The attainment of a larger degree of economic independence. "Important sources from which Israel received substantial amounts in its first decade will either dry up or diminish in the near future, especially the reparation payments from Germany, which represent the largest single income to offset Israel's foreign deficit."
3. Increasing the cooperation of Jewish communities with Israel.

Dr. Neumann in his address declared that the "condemnation of Nazism (President Gamal Abdel Nasser, of the United Arab Republic) should not be taken as an expression of hostility or of opposition to Arab nationalism."

The Zionist leader said that "it is part of our fundamental Zionist credo that all nations, all peoples, great and small, have an inalienable right to freedom, independence and the unhindered development of their national life. 'Their legitimate aspirations,' he declared, 'should be respected and encouraged, provided these do not impinge upon the legitimate rights of other peoples.'

Turning to the American Jewish scene, Dr. Neumann declared that the Zionist movement must cope with the "internal problems of Jewish life."

In calling for a "radical readjustment" in the Zionist program, says the New York Times, Dr. Neumann listed as the movement's major tasks "the rearing of a new Jewish generation not only in the spirit of American democracy but dedicated to the preservation of our people, its literature, its traditions and its spiritual heritage."

"Israel," he said, "is the heart of Jewish people, but our American community is the heart-land of the Diaspora (Jews living outside of Israel). What happens here in the next quarter of a century may well determine the character and the direction of Jewish life and the destiny of our people."

Churchill And The Jews

BY GERALD KATZ

A quick glance at the subject heading of "Churchill, Winston S." in any of the recent issues of the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature will astonish and possibly frighten a reader bent on research by the vast number of entries. Indeed, within the last decade there were almost three hundred articles all dealing mainly with Sir Winston. Their tones vary considerably: "Churchill as Machiavelli" (cynical); "Britannia's Indestructible Old Man" (laudable); "Churchill the Provocative" (disputatious); "Naughty Boy's Return" (prodigal); "Churchill and the Dragons" (chivalric); "Tale of an Upstairs Maid (sexual); "Churchill and the Limitations of Myth" (aesthetic). In brief, there is an essay for every taste. Jewish writers have also had their share of the statesman. Unfortunately, their adoption of Churchill to the Zionist cause has been something less than critical, and adoration has sometimes supplanted accuracy in the historical picture. (The best compilation of Churchill's remarks on Judaism has been made by Oskar K. Rabin-owitz in Winston Churchill on Jewish Problems). It would be foolish, indeed, to deny Churchill's pro-Zionist sentiments, but in a career that has been as long, as erratic, and as volatile as Churchill's, it is quite possible to find evidence for his support of a wide variety of causes.

His penchant for oracular paradoxes, rhythmic alliterations, and plain "orneriness" have served to confuse issues and create myths. Moreover, a man who has alternated party benches does not lend himself to facile treatment. In order to view Churchill in perspective — at least in regard to Zionism — it is necessary to account for his personality and his assumptions as an historian besides his political actions.

Churchill's half-century of associations with Jews has not always had the neat political consequences that consistency dictates and any account that regards his actions as systematically sympathetic or callously indifferent misreads the record. The truth is somewhere in between.

Churchill took his first strong political stand for Jewish interests at the beginning of the century. The Aliens Bill of 1904 was defeated largely by his intervention, but the question arose again the following year. This bill marked the first significant outbreak of hostility toward English Jews since the passage of Jewish emancipation in 1858.

England, with unlimited immigration, provided both a haven and a point of departure to the United States for European Jewry caught in the rising tide of anti-Semitism during the last quarter of the nineteenth century. The Aliens Bill contained a double-pronged attack on the Jewish world: it not only restricted immigration from the Continent, a considerable portion of which was then Jewish, but it also provided for the deportation of "undesirable aliens."

The conditions of immigration laid down in the bill were ambiguous and its implementation open to varying interpretations. Churchill presided over a Manchester protest meeting and subsequently read the resolutions of the meeting in the House of Commons. He called upon the Balfour government to "prevent an expulsion order being made on grounds so trivial as 'living under insanitary conditions due to overcrowding.'" Ironically, the bill was passed by the Conservatives, only to be administered by the Liberals after the general election of 1906.

It was in the preparations for the election of 1906 that Churchill came into closer contact with Manchester's vigorous Jewish community. The Manchester district that sent him to the House of Commons in the election contained a great number of Jewish electors. Churchill readily spoke against the Aliens Act and the Russian pogroms, and consequently was honored by the Manchester Old Hebrew Congregation.

In Manchester he became acquainted with Nathan Laski, president of the Congregation, and the newly-arrived ardent Zionist, Dr. Chaim Weizmann. Undoubtedly, his understanding of Jewish problems was deepened by his contact with these able Jews.

Likewise, from the moment of the British decision in 1903 to aid in founding a Jewish National Home, Churchill's position was friendly. Inside the British empire a territory "not less healthy but less crowded than these islands" could be designated.

COOPERMAN-LEIBOVITZ

The marriage of Miss Sandra Leibovitz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Max Leibovitz, 58 Cherrywood Avenue, to Edward Charles Cooperman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Cooperman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was solemnized at Viewmount Centre, on December 20, at six o'clock, by Rabbi David Monson assisted by Cantor J. Cooper. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. Her white silk peau de sole gown was fashioned with an ankle-length, bouffant skirt, with draped side panels; V-neckline with a cut-out square back; and fitted bodice with an elbow-length sleeves. Her fingertip illusion veil was caught to a coronet of seed-pearl-beading, and she carried a white prayer book with red and white roses and white satin streamers. Miss Edith Glavert, was maid of honour. She wore Kelly-green peau de sole made with a fitted bodice embroidered with iridescent sequins; a square neckline; and a bell-shaped skirt. She had a matching bandeau and carried a cascade bouquet of orange-tinted roses. Marlene Shulman, aged eleven years, niece of the bride, was junior bridesmaid, wearing a light aquamarine-blue silk organza dress; and a matching bandeau; and carried a nosegay of yellow roses. Steven Cooperman, brother of the groom, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was best man. The ushers were: Norman Shulman, nephew of the bride; Al Leibovitz, brother of the bride; David Cornblum; and Kenneth Magidov, Bruce Haima, and Robert Karinsky, all of Philadelphia, Penn. The aisle and altar were decorated with white chrysanthemums. A dinner and reception followed at the Viewmount Centre. Mrs. Leibovitz, mother of the bride, wore a princess gown of brown lace over gold-tones, which had a straight skirt that flared at the hemline; and a corsage of Talisman roses. Mrs. Cooperman, mother of the groom, wore an ice-blue lace sheath, with a scooped neckline; and a matching hat; and her corsage was of pink roses. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Cooperman spent their wedding trip at the Nevele Country Club, in Ellenville, N. Y., the bride travelling in a pink wool sheath, cut with a square neckline; and had a corsage of white gardenias. They will reside in Philadelphia, Penn. The wedding guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Louis Oseransky, Mrs. Lilian Blau, Arthur Sorin, and Miss Elizabeth Sorin, all of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. F. Hersch, Miss Sally Hersch, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Landau, and sons, Richard and Lawrence; and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Moss, all of Detroit, Mich.

BONGARD-BAUM

Bongard, 47 Fairholme Avenue, was solemnized on December 21, at half-past five o'clock, at Torah Emeth Synagogue, by Rabbi M. Ochs, assisted by Cantor J. Seigelman. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white, peau de faïence, with an Empire bodice; long sleeves; round neckline; and a long, full skirt, appliqued with lace, which had a train. Her fingertip illusion veil was held by a small, jewelled crown; and she carried a bouquet of pink roses and white carnations. The matrons of honour were: Mrs. Richard Bongard, wearing royal-blue peau de sole; and Mrs. Irving Klianman, wearing royal-blue peau de faïence. Each had a small, rhinestone tiara; and carried a bouquet of pink roses, and blue-tinted carnations. The bridesmaids were: Mesdames John Sauber, Burney Bongard, Michael Schacht, and A. Hertz. They wore identical gowns of light navy-blue silk; and headpieces and flowers like those of the matrons of honour. The flower girl was Marilyn Bongard, aged three and one-half years. She wore a powder-blue organza dress; and a matching bow for her hair; and carried a nosegay of pink roses, and blue and white carnations. The best man was Richard Bongard, brother of the groom. The ushers were: Burney Bongard, Irving Klianman, Arthur Steinman, Ralph Bongard, Percy Freedman, and Herbert Cohen. The ring-bearers were: Allan Klianman, aged three and one-half years; and Leslie Andrew Winston, five; wearing dark blue tuxedos. The Synagogue was decorated with an archway of pink and white chrysanthemums and roses, centered with a Star of David, made of blue chrysanthemums. There were two standards of white pom-poms, gladioli, and chrysanthemums; and the aisles were adorned with white gladioli and pink chrysanthemums. For a reception at the Synagogue, an orchestra played. It's the

We're gregarious. We enjoy people around us, the sound of happy talk and laughter. But opening boxes and bottles to feed people and slake their thirst, takes a big bite out of what is laughingly called "disposable income". But we solved that problem when we discovered a pair of wonderful wines. Canadian "74" Sherry and "74" Port are the smoothest, brightest party drinks we've ever poured. They're delightful on the tongue, easy on the budget, welcomed by our friends.

Through the efforts of Joseph Chamberlain, Lord Lansdowne, Theodor Herzl and others, the Jewish Colonial Trust in 1904 sent a commission of inquiry to the East African Protectorate to investigate the possibilities for a Jewish settlement there.

The African scheme found neither many friends in Parliament nor at the Sixth Zionist Congress. With the memory of the Boer War still fresh, Haviland Burke echoed the sentiments of some members of Parliament when he stated that the "Jewish race... had been at the bottom of all our troubles in South Africa, and they own great English newspapers as absolutely as if those newspapers were edited by a Rabbi and printed in a synagogue."

But the Jews also had their defenders in Commons and Lloyd George rebuked Burke, commenting that his anti-Semitism was apparently hereditary for his great ancestor used to end his election addresses with:

"Down with Infidel, Jew or Turk,
All good Christians vote for Burke."

Meanwhile, Herzl had forced the African plan through the Zionist Congress, but only at the cost of disunity. The results of the commission's investigation of East Africa were decidedly unfavorable. It concluded that the proposed site was wholly unsuitable for colonization by Europeans, that the settlers there would fight against a Jewish influx, and finally that the territory could not accommodate more than a few immigrants. The following year the next Zionist Congress rejected the British proposal. However, the failure of the African scheme led to the establishment of the Jewish Territorial Organization by Israel Zangwill. Dominated by conservative English Jews, this group would have situated Zion wherever land was available. (After futile searching, the group died a natural death with the advent of the Balfour Declaration.)

Churchill's own visit to Africa, shortly thereafter, convinced him of the impracticability of the African site and he henceforth supported Zionism. Ever since he made the acquaintance of Manchester Jewry, "my heart," to use his own words "has throbbed with Zionism." Weizmann later observed that Churchill "stood at the cradle of the enterprise." This early switch from territorialism to Zionism preceded the Balfour Declaration by a decade.

Churchill's next significant action in behalf of the Jews occurred during the Russian Civil War. At the time, Churchill was Secretary for War in the Lloyd George Cabinet of 1919. Both the Bolsheviks and the anti-Bolsheviks were slaughtering Jews indiscriminately. Churchill supported General Denikin, commander of the anti-Bolshevik Volunteer Army in southern Russia, though Denikin was openly pursuing an anti-Semitic policy. Churchill declared: "It is of the very highest consequences that General Denikin should not only do everything in his power to prevent massacre of the Jews in the liberating districts, but should issue a proclamation against anti-Semitism."

He tried to persuade Denikin to change his policy, but would not withdraw his support when the general refused. The central problem was Bolshevism; anti-Semitism was only secondary.

Though Churchill did not have an active role in promulgating the Balfour Declaration of 1917, the Declaration was to be implemented by Churchill for a short time while he was Colonial Secretary.

During his tenure as Colonial Secretary (1921-1922), one of the recurrent crises in the history of the Balfour Declaration took place.

Lord Islington introduced in the House of Lords a measure to rescind the Balfour Declaration. He raised the point that a Zionist state would be inconsistent with earlier pledges given by the government to the Arabs and that the articles of the League required the Mandatory Power to govern with an eye to eventual self-determination of the territory. Further, it was pointed out that in the strained post-war economy, a mandated protectorate was an extravagant expense. And, finally, it was argued that the Declaration was unconstitutional since it had never been introduced in Parliament. Two weeks later the issue came to a head in "the other place" — the House of Commons.

Churchill insisted that "the fulfillment of the Balfour Declaration was an integral part of the whole mandatory system, as inaugurated by agreement between the victorious Powers and by the Treaty of Versailles." Churchill then proceeded to demolish Lord Islington's arguments. Earlier pledges (1916) to the Arabs to assign Trans-Jordan to their sphere of influence were made, but these had not included land west of the Jordan River. The costs of the mandate were in reality quite cheap considering the strategic location it afforded near the Suez Canal.

Even the constitutional argument collapsed when Churchill cited all the auxiliary legislation to the Declaration that had been passed by Parliament. He ended the debate by reading statements made by the opposition politicians over the past five years — all in favor of the Balfour Declaration. Churchill had apparently saved the day.

However, four days previous to this debate the government had produced the White Paper of July, 1922 — termed the Churchill White Paper — which limited the Balfour Declaration by detaching the area east of the Jordan River from its operation. Both Churchill's defense of the Declaration and his administrative action were, in that sense, consistent. Yet the Churchill White Paper, in its way, limited the original Declaration appreciably. Moreover, immigration would be regulated by the ill-defined principle of "economic absorptive capacity."

Thus, what was saved in Parliament for Zionism was, in part, lost or thrown away by the Administration. This sleight of hand of British imperial policy developed by 1939 into what has been called "the Palestine Vanishing Trick." Churchill's ambiguous position came to an end with the government's defeat in the general election of 1922. Two years later, he moved away from colonial affairs and into the Exchequer, and by the end of the twenties into political limbo.

The interval in Palestine was filled with permit restrictions, riots, and incidents concerning economic concessions. "For the Jews Zionism was a messianic inspiration. For the British Administration it was simply a damned

Filing Extended For Claims Against Germany

The Canadian Jewish Congress announces that, due to an extension of the filing period, certain claims based on the confiscation of movable property, such as furniture, securities, bank accounts, jewellery and the like, are still possible if registered in Germany by March 31, 1939. However, if the confiscation did not take place in Germany, submission of proof is necessary not only of the confiscation but of the fact that the property was actually carried off to the territory of what is now the German Federal Republic or to Berlin.

In the Western countries under former occupation, namely France, Belgium, Holland, and Luxembourg, the contents of Jewish apartments were, as a rule, taken to Western Germany or Berlin. For valuables confiscated in the former Eastern and Central European countries, including Austria, claims can only be submitted where proof exists that they were carried off to the territory of the German Federal Republic or Berlin.

Persons unable to make other provision for the prosecution of their claims may do so through the United Restitution Organization (URO), which is represented in Canada by the Canadian Jewish Congress with headquarters in Montreal and regional offices in Toronto, Winnipeg, and Vancouver. (When contacting URO, prospective applicants should refer to this magazine announcement).

nuisance," commented Arthur Koestler.

In the thirties, when out of office, Churchill turned for inspiration and consolation to Moses. Reflecting on Moses (Amid These Storms: Thoughts and Adventures, 1932), he went beyond mere description. Moses served as an object lesson to the displaced statesman. Churchill perceived that "every prophet has to go into the wilderness. He must have a strong impression of a complex society and all that it has to give, and then he must serve periods of isolation and meditation. This is the process by which psychic dynamite is made." The allegory is almost too perfect. But then, Churchill has always had a strong belief in his own destiny. Before long, Churchill returned from the political desert to detonate his own explosives.

In 1937, a Royal Commission recommended that Palestine be partitioned into separate Jewish and Arab sectors. Parliament considered the recommendation but finally rejected such a solution. Churchill also found it unsatisfactory. The partition of 1937 would have been a small disservice, however, compared to the government White Paper two years later (for which the Conservative Party was responsible). The White Paper of 1939, which terminated Jewish immigration by 1944, alienated Palestine Jewry without winning over the Arabs.

Churchill, in one of the sharpest speeches of his career, denounced it as a "base betrayal, a petition in moral bankruptcy." But Churchill did not hold office and his counsel was suspected and disregarded in high Tory ranks.

Jewish agencies were determined to gain admittance to Palestine for a large number of immigrants; the English were apathetic to this question of immigration and were ignorant of the plight of continental Jewry. In his autobiography, Trial and Error, Weizmann says of the English ruling class: "Judging from its behavior at that time it either did not know, or else it did not wish to know, because the knowledge was inconvenient, disturbing, and dangerous."

Churchill's sudden accession as Prime Minister changed the Palestinian situation but little, for he was not a free agent in the coalition cabinet of 1940. In fact, Churchill's position as Prime Minister remained ambiguous and unprecedented for the first five months of office. From May to October, 1940, Churchill headed the coalition government but he was not the head of his own party. Never before had a Conservative M.P. become the leader of the government without automatically assuming the leadership of the party. But Chamberlain held the reins of the party till shortly before his death in November.

More than any other incident, this reflected the suspicions and doubts held by the high Tories about Churchill. Consequently, Churchill had more difficulties with members of his own party in the government — at least over Jewish problems — than he had with the Laborites. For example, the great number of troops required to keep peace in Palestine in 1939-1940 was due to the "anti-Jewish policy which commends itself only to a section of the Conservative party."

After Churchill took office, Jews throughout the world waited for him to abrogate the 1939 White Paper. They waited in vain. Churchill's position could neither be reconciled with his stand in 1939 or subsequently understood in the light of his own memoirs. "I cannot agree that the White Paper of 1939 is the firmly established policy of His Majesty's present government. . . I am sure that the majority of the present War Cabinet (April, 1943) would never agree to any positive endorsement of the White Paper. It runs until it is superseded."

Perhaps this political sin of omission can only be appreciated by remembering that Sir Winston had not taken office to preside over the dissolution of the Empire, or the White Paper for that matter. Regardless of what Churchill thought about the bottleneck of Jewish immigration, he made no public statements on it during the course of the war. However, one story — possibly apocryphal — illuminates Churchill's relations with Weizmann: "Whenever I see him (Weizmann), I can't sleep at night."

By the end of the war, Churchill desired to have the Palestine Mandate question settled at the peace-table. Morosely, he remarked: "I am not aware of the slightest advantage which has ever accrued to Great Britain from the painful and thankless task." (However, in a more placid period before the war, he had thought in 1938 "up till 1934 Palestine was in every respect a credit to our administration.")

By 1946, the Palestine question had become for Britain not only a thankless task but a hot potato as well. With the downfall of the coalition government in 1946, Churchill was again relegated to the political nether world, while Jews welcomed the pro-Zionist Labor party. (Churchill might have expected it. Almost a century before, his favorite Anglo-Jewish statesman, Disraeli, concluded: "This I know, that England does not love coalitions.")

These, by and large, have been Churchill's connections with Judaism. The more important associations came after the First World War, during the implementation of the Balfour Declaration and the ascendancy of the Conservative party. In fact, most of the major decisions concerning Palestine were made under Conservative governments.

Churchill's relation to the party had always been a curious one. Starting as a Conservative, he eventually made the full cycle — (Continued on Page Ten)

Annual Meeting of Shareholders The Royal Bank of Canada

James Muir urges more flexible tax system, with wider control of money and credit to curb chronic inflation

West can set an example of "free economy in action" by keeping markets open to underdeveloped countries.

"Chronic inflation is the greatest single threat to Canada's economic development," declared James Muir, Chairman and President of The Royal Bank of Canada, at the bank's Annual Meeting in Montreal on Thursday, January 8th. Reviewing the conditions which must be met to ensure continuing economic growth, high level employment and a stable currency, Mr. Muir said, "Regardless of the skill and energy of the monetary authorities, an effective monetary policy is impossible so long as consumer credit is free to move in the opposite direction. The Central Bank contracts credit in booms and expands in recession. Unregulated consumer credit expands in booms, contracts in recession. Those dependent on bank credit have to bear the full brunt of credit restriction while others enjoy a spending spree. To break up this unholy alliance of injustice and futility I have repeatedly urged that monetary and credit control should embrace a wider area of our financial world than they now do."

FORMIDABLE TASK

"Until fundamental budget changes can be made the Government must finance its deficit by selling bonds to the general public, the chartered banks, or the Bank of Canada. The shift from bonds to equities, in spite of the relative attractiveness of bond yields, rules out the general public. The need for liquidity inhibits sales to the banks, except for the shorter maturities. Purchases of securities by the Bank of Canada, whether from the general public, the chartered banks, or in this case the Government, finances government debt through an increase in the money supply. Thus at a time when inflationary pressure is growing, the indicated policy for the Bank of Canada, monetary restraint, may run directly counter to the financial needs of the Government. It is this formidable task of steering between Scylla and Charybdis, between failure of monetary policy and failure of fiscal policy which, in the months ahead, will try to the limit the imagination and resourcefulness of those charged with the problem of government finance."

"But surely it is not beyond the wit of our fiscal experts in government and elsewhere to devise a system that will minimize the role of the business cycle in determining the size and nature of government sponsored economic activity. Surely a more flexible tax system could be devised which would adjust tax rates to counter cyclical disturbances, not only quickly and effectively but without arbitrarily changing the relative importance of the government sector in our economic life. Such a system, combined with a more comprehensive coverage by our monetary authorities in the regulation of credit, could I think provide an economic climate for high-level employment and economic growth and, at the same time, protect the value of our currency from the ravages of chronic inflation."

CONVERTIBILITY

Referring to the recent devaluation of the franc, and Britain's move toward convertibility, Mr. Muir said, "One of the most important devices for ensuring the mobility of investment funds, capital goods, consumer goods and services among the nations of the world is a freely operating foreign-exchange market. In this context two recent events of special

RISK-TAKER MERITS REWARD

"Adequate reward for productive effort and risk is an important condition for economic development," said Mr. Muir. "Government, with the aid of tax experts, should make a thorough study of our complex tax structure with a view to improvement both in the distribution of the burdens and in the allocation of the net rewards for productive activity."

"I would like now to move to more specific cases. If labour becomes more productive, higher wages can be paid without inflation. The increase is both an incentive and a deserved reward. If risks are taken to expand production in some direction, the opportunity for a correspondingly large reward is not only prerequisite, but justified to the extent of the risk-taker's contribution to general welfare."

"I would like to join those who are urging the Government in considering the report of the Borden Commission on Energy not to move hastily to put a public-utility strait-jacket on one of the most important contributors to Canada's risk-capital investment: the oil and gas industry — a risk industry that has been responsible in large measure for Canada's brilliant economic showing since the second world war."

"Uncertainty bred of fear, fear of crippling regulation, can cut off risk investment and destroy all hope in the free world for sustained and healthy economic growth."

Interest concern the French franc and the pound sterling.

"Devaluation of the French franc was inevitable. Now it remains to be seen how stable the new rate will be. Naturally this will depend upon how firmly the internal economy of the country can be built up and upon how faithfully the people will accept the new restrictions they must endure to come through successfully."

"The immediate significance of Britain's move towards convertibility must not be exaggerated. All she has done is to make formal what has informally been more or less the case, viz, put Canadian and U.S. sterling, so-called, and transferable sterling in the same bracket. This means that all non-sterling area holders of pounds are now in the same boat, which is to say they can freely dispose of their sterling for dollars or any other currency at the going rate within the support points established by the British authorities, viz $2.78 to $2.82 U.S."

"One important outcome is that London can deal freely and directly with all currencies and again get back to where she was before the war as the most important foreign exchange market in the world."

"The great hope is that these latest developments will hasten the day when the U.K. can throw all shackles overboard and make the pound free and fully convertible for everybody inside, as well as outside the sterling area."

FOREIGN AID

Aid to underdeveloped countries," said Mr. Muir, "is useless unless it leads to sustained, and Royal Bank Assets over $4 Billion.

K. M. Sedgewick, General Manager, reported that Royal Bank assets had passed the $4 billion mark, and that Capital funds now totalled nearly $250,000,000. "Deposit figures in Canada have, of course, increased markedly," said Mr. Sedgewick, "and we are particularly pleased to see substantial growth during the year in our personal savings deposits where the figures are larger by $148 million odd than those of a year ago. As at date of the Balance Sheet, our depositors numbered 3,927,121, indeed a source of much satisfaction to us."

Mortgage loans arranged by the Royal Bank had increased by 22% to nearly $265,000,000, and shareholders now numbered 22,156, an increase of 2,200 in the year.

Referring to the bank's continuing programme of new construction and the improvement of existing premises, Mr. Sedgewick noted that important new offices, now under construction, would be opened in 1959 at Charlottetown, Montreal and Vancouver and that within a few months work would commence on new main offices in Ottawa and Windsor and on an important branch office in Edmonton.

BUILDING PROGRAMME

"During 1958 we opened 38 new branches in Canada and four outside Canada—three of which were in Cuba and one in Puerto Rico. We have completed major additions to our branches in Bridgeport, Barbados, Nassau, Bahamas and at a number of other points. Work is underway now on new main office buildings for Kingston, Jamaica and Ciudad Trujillo, Dominican Republic. Also our Bogota, Colombia main office is being expanded and completely modernized."

The recent appointment of a Far Eastern Representative, with headquarters in Hong Kong, said Mr. Sedgewick, had placed The Royal Bank of Canada in a position to provide on-the-spot assistance to foreign traders who wished to take advantage of what Mr. Sedgewick felt to be "opportunities for further important expansion of trade between Canada and far eastern countries."

self-sustaining, development; and fundamental social changes in the underdeveloped country are required before the spirit of enterprise is sufficiently strong to achieve what we might call 'escape velocity' independent of the temporary rocket-thrust of economic aid. Without fundamental changes, greatly expanded aid fanned by over-enthusiasm, if not emotional compulsion, may have perverse effects, not only in the inflation-ridden West, but in the underdeveloped countries themselves.

"I think we must raise the question whether earmarking more aid is best for East Asians or the West until much more has been done both in education and in the careful preparation of programmes that achieve a proper balance between agricultural and industrial development."

The big question, said Mr. Muir, was whether the "uncommitted" underdeveloped countries would try to develop a private enterprise economy as an instrument of growth. This depended, he said, "not merely on expanded economic aid but on the example set by the West, and by a good example, I mean not merely that we set our own house in order but that we keep the economies of the West open to the goods produced by the underdeveloped countries. Otherwise we can only expect these countries to adopt a policy of self-sufficiency with its inevitable counterpart, centralized control of the economic system. In other words, if we would have underdeveloped countries abroad develop along private-enterprise lines, we must set them an example of the free economy in action."

Liberal, Coalitionist, and again Conservative — though the process took twenty-five years. Perhaps this is the most astounding of his feats: the political astuteness that enabled him to pull off a volte-face without diminishing his popularity. With Zionist problems he managed to remain ahead of his Conservative peers in the eyes of Jews. Nevertheless, with respect to Palestinian limitations that the Conservatives desired, Churchill either partially undertook these in 1922 or acquiesced in 1939. There existed a distinct difference between his prose and his political actions.

While it is customary to bludgeon the Conservatives (among whom Churchill has appeared as an enlightened freethinker on Jewish questions) for a blundering and narrow Palestine policy, the brief Labor government under MacDonald did no better. The socialist Lord Passfield (Sidney are neither special nor unique in his thought. Indeed, Churchill sees the Jewish nation much in the manner in which he views civilization as a whole and great cultures in particular. English insularity and world Judaism have an aloofness, distinctiveness, and continuity that Churchill has come to associate with both societies.

kindle the lamps of Jewish life and of civilization. To supply this sacred oil is the business of religion, the task of practical theology.

Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education of New York City and president of Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, served as chairman of the dinner, with Morris J. Bernstein, Samuel Blumberg, Hyman J. Ross, and Jacob Sincoff.

The committee presented to Dr. Goldstein a volume containing congratulatory messages from leaders in all walks of life, and included among them were felicitations from President Eisenhower and Webb), Colonial Secretary in MacDonald's government, issued a White Paper in 1930 that was so pro-Arab and so inconsistent with the Mandate that even Conservative spokesmen Stanley Baldwin, Austin Chamberlain, and L. S. Amery attacked it. MacDonald mitigated the Paper, but never withdrew it.

For the next ten years, while the Conservatives governed, Labor presented a pro-Zionist party platform. But the Laborites, after the 1945 election, were not quick to formulate a Palestine policy, let alone a sympathetic one for Jews. Hevin, the new Foreign Secretary, still thought in terms of trusteeships.

Churchill observed that "the decline of our influence and power throughout the Middle East is due to . . . mistakes and miscalculations in policy which led to the winding up of our affairs in Palestine in such a way as to earn almost in equal degrees the hatred of the Arabs and the Jews."

Churchill derived his sympathy for Jews in part from his appreciation of dynamic Jewish personalities (Dizraeli, Weizmann, Nathan and Harold Laski, Zangwill) and in part from historical considerations. Undoubtedly, his formative years must also account, in part, for this sympathy.

From a Low Church background, he passed through a phase of passive conformity to agnosticism. He acquired an admiration for the deist historians, Gibbon and Lecky, but finally showed a strong interest in the Bible and its language. Possibly his appreciation of Judaism developed in some part out of reading the Old Testament. Certainly his aphoristic style, in oratory and writing, is often Biblical in tone.

Though an early admirer of both Edmund Burke and Sir Robert Peel, Churchill's model, in so far as he has one, would seem to be Benjamin Disraeli, or the "Jew Prime Minister of England," as he affectionately termed him. Like Disraeli, Churchill began his career as an author. The doctrine of Tory democracy that Disraeli molded, however erratically, was adopted by Lord Randolph Churchill and in turn passed on to his son, Winston.

While Jewish personalities and influences are unmistakably part of Churchill's background, Churchill, the historian, has been able to identify the histories of the English and the Jews with his own general views of historical development. Essentially, Churchill's outlook has always been conservative in spirit. Unified communities perpetuated traditions and respected customs. The Jews apparently conformed to this pattern, and Churchill was "very glad to have had the experience of watching the life and work of the Jewish community in England; there is a high sense of corporate responsibility in the community."

The organic connection with the past, fundamental and vital for British life, was also necessary for the corporate spirit of Jewish life. Jewish tribulations and developments might have happened to any chosen people, and "we may believe that they happened to people not so very different from ourselves." (Had not the English always stood pre-eminent in God's grace also? Milton expressed the sentiments in Areopagitica in 1684: "What does He then but reveal Himself to His servants, and, as His manner is, first to His Englishmen?")

Churchill's ostensible duty has been in promulgating the interests of Britain. But within those interests, he has found space for an announcement of and striving for Jewish needs. At times his oracular voice has been strangely still, while his actions have seemed quizzical and diffident. Though his consistency has not always been literal, a general pattern favorably stands forth.

Moreover, Churchill's action on behalf of Judaism and his historical perspective are necessarily entwined. To view Churchill's conception of the Jews apart from his conception of history can have no meaning. His sympathies and regard for the Jewish community

Looking Toward A Community Program For The Development Of Youth

BY FLORENCE HUTNER, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT, UNITED JEWISH WELFARE FUND OF TORONTO

A small child hurt her finger. After the finger was bandaged and the tears were dried, the pain continued. Her parents tried to distract her, and for a time they seemed to be successful. When the tears started again, the little girl explained: "You know, most of the time I never think of my finger, it just does what I tell it. Now that it hurts, I can't think of anything else." When parts of the body are healthy and functioning in normal fashion, we pay no attention to them. When accident or disease strikes, the afflicted member absorbs our entire attention.

Youth is an important arm of the community. The hopes of the older members rest in their children; the ambition of parents re-live again in the accomplishments of their growing young ones; the heritage of a race is carried forward by the developing adults who shoulder responsibilities as they mature.

Too often, a community however, pays no attention to the needs of its younger members when they present no problem. When juvenile delinquency develops, with gang wars, narcotics, and teen-age murders, then the community attention becomes focused upon the manifestation of the social illness.

Educators, social workers, clergy, lawyers, parents, police, and the institutions which they represent, form commissions, undertake surveys, plan social services, create recreational centres and pool their knowledge and resources to combat the disease which has sprouted in their midst. The best intelligences and most highly developed skills which a community can muster are brought to bear on ascertaining causes and on establishing programs to overcome the ills which have produced the anti-social behaviour destroying homes and wrecking lives. Citizens' groups quickly rally and civic authority comes into action.

It is not difficult to arouse all these elements in a community once its peace and harmony have been threatened. The more difficult task is to provoke action when there is no crisis.

The needs of youth are always with us; it is when they are neglected that trouble erupts. These needs are based in the home, the school, and the community. A home with loving parents which provides human warmth, understanding, and security is the first leg of the tripod. Social workers are no longer symbolized by the stern-faced social worker of Elmer Rice's "Street Scene" whose sole idea was to remove the children to an orphanage.

The modern, trained social worker recognizes the importance of keeping a home intact for the psychological needs of the child and strives with all the skills at his disposal of the profession to overcome the handicaps of illness, lack of income, and tension between parents, in order to keep the family unit together. The foster home which has largely replaced the orphanage for the care of children, is only used when death of parents, or deep-rooted problems destroy the home or make it impossible for the child to remain within his own family.

Youth needs educational training and opportunities for its full development. Public schools with progressive, well integrated programs, giving a child every scope for his learning process, form the second leg of the tripod. The lesson of "Compulsion", the story of the Leopold-Loeb case in Chicago, points to the necessity for as much attention to the needs of the highly intelligent, as to the needs of the mentally retarded child. All men are not born equal. Some are born with higher intelligence than others, and this unequal quality presents educators with one of their most serious challenges.

It is difficult to devise a curriculum which can meet the individual pace of absorption for a class of fifty students; however, special classes for the highly intelligent student as well as for the lower-than-average student are being developed in many progressive educational systems.

The community which provides the third leg of the tripod has a less obvious, but not a less important role. The same parent, unfortunately, who sees the importance of joining a Parent-Teachers Association to further the education of his child, is often much slower to join a community project for the recreational program for the same child; unless some outbreak of delinquency occurs. And yet the child who is growing up in today's world needs the community's interest. The sight of a group of teen-agers using a shopping center in suburban area as a meeting place is becoming one of today's landmarks. Thousands of homes fill an area before a community is established for the youth who are left to their own resources after school hours.

When the finger begins to hurt, then it commands attention. When the undirected activities of young boys and girls lead to gangs and gang fights, to a series of juvenile rowdism or house-breaking, then it is easy to rouse parental and public action. Nobody pays too much attention to the healthy body, or takes the time for preventive programs. And yet there are many resources for such programs. If a community center facility is not available, schools, churches and synagogues can be used.

In some localities, recreational commissions have been established to help their communities to develop group work and leisure time activities for youth and adults in the area. These commissions have a very broad scope; their emphasis is usually on playgrounds, swimming pools, central recreational buildings and programs allied with these facilities; when the building structures are not available, successful programs have been conducted in schools.

In a recent paper given before the National Conference of Jewish Community Services, Louis Berkowitz, of the Educational Alliance of New York, took the aphorism of Hillel: "If I am not for myself, then who will be for me? But if I am only for myself, what am I?" as a thesis in describing the role of the Jewish Centre in a community. Applying this to the question of a Jewish Centre and its role in the community, we emerge with a clearly stated point of view, states Mr. Berkowitz: "Simple and practical, yet profound in its psychological and sociological meaning."

As an individual and as a Jew, I have rights and I must assert them. But if I become solely self-centered, then "What am I?" Individual and group adjustment are two sides of the same coin. One side represents the internal individual and internal group adjustment, the ability to live at peace with oneself and with one's own group, with an affirmation of one's own and one's group's own worth. The other side is the individual's relation to the world around him.

This is the growing and accepted philosophy of Jewish Centres: to provide the environment for the full development of the Jewish individual, and the background which will make him secure in his contacts with the non-Jewish world. First, he must be for himself through self-knowledge and acceptance and then he must be aware of other people, and be for them, as well as for himself.

The true story of one small borrower...and "MY BANK"

A few weeks ago, Julian Janvrin, an Englishman by birth now living in Toronto, came upon this headline in his daily newspaper: "Bank of Montreal Deposits Top the Three Billion Mark". A depositor at the B of M since shortly after his arrival in Canada five years ago, Mr. Janvrin was prompted by the headline to write a letter to Gordon R. Bail, president of the B of M, outlining his experiences as both a depositor and borrower at Canada's first bank. We thought Mr. Janvrin's story of his struggle against adversity was worth repeating, and with his permission, have made it the basis of this advertisement.

The Success Story of Julian Janvrin...

Julian Janvrin is the last person in the world to say that his is a success story. We think it is. But you can judge for yourself.

FIVE YEARS AGO, shortly after his arrival in Canada with his wife and three children, Mr. Janvrin had occasion to cash a cheque at his local B of M branch in Toronto. "Although I had told the manager that I was just an immigrant," he recalls, "he invited me to open an account, and it was gratifying to me to feel that my confidence in the future of Canada was reciprocated by the Bank of Montreal. Two or three weeks later I opened an account at that branch."

Like most newcomers to Canada, Mr. Janvrin had only enough capital when he arrived to get himself settled, and eventually he found himself short in meeting the final payment on his car, which was essential in his new job as a salesman. So he talked over his problem with his B of M manager, who considered him a good enough risk to advance him the money he needed.

But let Mr. Janvrin continue the story in his own words: "I mention this because bankers are sometimes charged with being little more than moneylenders and usurers, but in this instance, I knew that the Bank of Montreal was acting as it were on behalf of the people of Canada in helping me to get established in much the same way as in pioneer days the Bank of Montreal must have advanced funds to immigrants to purchase seed, a few implements and maybe a team of horses."

An average Canadian family, Mr. & Mrs. Janvrin and the two youngest children relax at TV in their comfortable Toronto apartment.

"Soon afterwards I gave up selling, disposed of the car and took a regular job by night, while my wife by day quite literally took the holes out of doughnuts. One of us was able always to be with the children, two of whom were not then of school age."

"Fifteen months later we decided to obtain cheaper rental accommodation outside Toronto. A car, however, would then be essential. Again the bank went along with us. Two years ago the landlord of the house we were renting decided to sell the house. Again the Bank of Montreal helped us and advanced the down payment that prevented our home being sold over our heads."

"This summer my son, having passed through six grades in three years at public school, sat for the competitive entrance examination to a school for which I would have to pay an annual fee. For this, too, I am in large measure indebted to the Bank of Montreal, for in June my financial circumstances were such that had I not been confident of my banker's support, I might not have ever considered sending him to this school."

"We have now again moved into Toronto to be nearer the school, but our circumstances have improved, inasmuch as our teenage daughter has now left high school of her own wish and is now working; and as the two younger children are now at school, my wife in the New Year will be in a position to take an office job."

"This is not a success story, for the struggle, believe me, is still on. But our bank account is now in better shape than it has been for the past five years and will now perhaps bear scrutiny."

"I am now, therefore, at last in a position to write to thank My Bank and in particular my bank manager, for the confidence it placed in us and for the help, encouragement and courtesy it has always extended to us."

"To me it is no surprise that the deposits of the Bank of Montreal should have topped the 3-billion mark, for although from the short term point of view I myself am not yet in a position to make large deposits, it may well be from the long term point of view, that my son, as a representative of the coming generation, may be in a position to do as other sons of Canada are now doing."

The B of M is, of course, proud to have played its part in Julian Janvrin's success story, and is grateful to him for allowing us to publish it to indicate some of the many ways in which Canada's first bank works with Canadians—new and old alike—in every walk of life from coast to coast.

Mr. Janvrin's story provides a sincere and unsolicited testimonial to the fact that "When you ask for a loan at the Bank of Montreal, you do not ask a favour."

When money is a problem with you, why not see your B of M manager? If your proposition is sound and reasonable there's money for you at the B of M...at the lowest rates and on the fairest terms.

"Get to know your banker," says Mr. Janvrin. "Your best collateral is his confidence." A spare-time free-lance writer, he spends many evenings at his typewriter while the children study.

Nine-year-old Robert Janvrin, born with his younger sister, Patricia, is a student at one of Canada's top preparatory schools, thanks to a timely B of M Personal Loan.
